CSRF Attack Under normal circumstances, authentication consists of user name and password. The user name and the password are checked against a login form to ensure that it is the right user and that the right user has been authenticated. When a user logs into a site, he provides a valid username and password, these will be checked by the site. The site will then create a session cookie and the user will be logged in to the site. The username and password are passed in the URL on a POST request and the password gets encrypted with some encryption algorithm to get the data sent to a server. This is normally done in a and the user name and password will also be part of the HTML form. If the user name and password are correct the the user name and the session cookie will be updated. In this article we will look at a CSRF attack that exploits this process.

CSRF: CROSSWORD SESSION REFERENCE When a web browser is processing a request, the browser is always sending the cookie back and forth between the client and the server. The cookie value will vary depending on the data and the client being queried. Since a cookie can be rewritten, a request can contain CSRF tokens that help ensure the request is being sent by a different user than before. The session reference is the SessionID from a request, the session cookie is set in the browser and that session cookie is sent with every request.

- different stories with several different endings each - open-ended and non-linear game about the life of You - more than 10 possible alternative endings - I would like to draw special attention to what the story was missing up until now: everything happens in the room with You. All of You and all of the surrounding world. Endings are to be found in the other story-worlds that you discover. - you have an ability to change an ending. - the game is not fully finished and much more features are planned Additional info: - Game is distributed on an ad-supported model. Since the storyline has the same ending in all cases, there's an option in the game to see the endings in order, without the ads. - the game is still in the early stages of development and could change in major parts, like endings This is a remake of a short film. I've made a couple of mistakes, which you'll spot in 2 hours of playing. I've tried to give an overall idea of what the game is, without giving away the game's backstory. - This game is fully playable in non-linear fashion. You can choose to play the game all the way up to the end. Or, if you want to do it a different way: you can use the 'back door' to access other endings, and go to different places in the game. Things to note: - the game is written in PL/1, so if you feel it's not your cup of tea, I have no way of fixing it - the game is still in an early stage of development (but it's playable) - there are currently more than 40 endings, with some more coming soon. - the game has no loading screens or graphic transitions. Everything happens right away, you just have to think and click. Download the game from here: Note that this is the version with the full graphic novel. The comic version, you can find here: - this version of the game has the secret ending If you have any questions, you can always contact me at this address: - The game is free, but you'll receive some pay

: How to Buy Class Rank, Win Prizes and Get the Very Best A graduation present for the full-time students. There is a unique reward structure that exists among the community of the Casual Tier (Level 15) platform. I've never seen anything quite like it on any other platform that I've used to play in a myriad of games. How I got it right I've been playing a number of MOBA games - League of Legends, Vainglory and Heroes of the Storm. I've been at Casual Tier (Level 15) for approximately 9 months - no progression required. Through the casual mode, which guarantees $5 for every 50 seconds of game time, I've been accumulating enough currency to do whatever I wanted - buy intrepid gear (+1 level), unlock gold (free) and gold (pay for in game currency) or else I could simply ignore it all together, game time consisted of between 5-10 hours. What I enjoyed was that I thought there was no reason to progress in casual - the constant currency accumulation and conversion of hard currency to hard currency, meaning no real investment was required. However, there was one major reward that made the casual mode worth playing - after completing 100 minutes of game time, one is awarded a prize pack. That pack consists of four random items of varying rarity - for all I know they may be one of the rarest items available on the game (at the time), but then again they could be completely generic loot. Regardless, four random items of varying rarity is a nice win and a little bit of luck. Generally, it's a reward that is not guaranteed - as if you don't play the game after a while, your 100 minute period may have passed and you're out of luck. However, each time you log in, it's a new chance of the four packs appearing. I calculate that it's worth a minimum of US$0.25 for each one. But that wasn't the best part. What I enjoyed was that the times spent playing casually were mine - there was no limit to the amount of time that I spent just messing around and another day could cost the same amount of time as the one prior. I had an additional moolah on top of that which was of course awarded at completion. So if I'm
