Wes Newton / Getty Images Donald Trump shocked the world last summer when he was elected president. This news came just a day after the European Union agreed to a controversial trade deal with the Trump administration, which Trump used to withdraw from the Trans-Pacific Partnership. The latest dust-up between the US and G7 countries concerns the climate change summit. In a recent interview with French media outlet BFM TV, VP Mike Pence warned France to "change its position" on the Paris agreement. "If President Macron wants to return to the table, we're ready to go back to the table," he said. "But we're not going to sacrifice American interests in order to protect an accord that really is giving away the industrial base of this country and shipping it off to China." Notably, Trump has already pulled the US out of the Paris Climate Agreement, a deal he claims is not "fair" to the US. In response to Pence's warning, French President Emmanuel Macron said, "This is totally contrary to our discussions and our agreements." He added, "With this statement, the United States is showing its inconsistency and its inconsistency is also a sign of weakness." According to the White House, Trump decided to pull out of the Paris accord because "it is simply too expensive." Reportedly, 35 CEOs of companies such as Apple and IBM have signed an open letter against the deal. On the other side of c6a93da74d
