Here's something else... One of the features of Photoshop Elements 7.0 is the ability to modify and add gradients and shapes (see the next section "Shapes: A Critter's Best Friend"). The Gradient Generator is a simplified gradient tool that enables you to generate a gradient from any color combination you like. To use the Gradient Generator, follow these steps: 1. Choose Tools⇒Options. 2. Scroll to the right to find the Gradient Generator. 3. Click the gradient tool icon. A set of guidelines with several colors indicates the gradient direction and intensity. You can choose one or two colors from which to create a gradient by clicking and dragging to specify the colors. You can also vary the gradient's intensity by dragging the slider. You can also choose from many preset gradient types. Try the options you think would work best for your image. The exact same option is available to Photoshop in the Gradient Palette. You can also create a gradient in the Layers palette: Click the palette's Fill icon, choose Gradient, and then click the Add Gradient to Drawer icon. A set of guidelines indicate the direction and intensity of the gradient. Click the gradient tool icon (the circle with the sliders) in the tools palette and choose your colors. You can create a gradient for each individual layer in a layer or group of layers. The gradient settings in the Layers palette are different from those in the Gradient palette, as you see in Figure 6-4, so for each layer you create, choose a color from the palette. FIGURE 6-4: The gradient settings in the Layers palette are different from those in the Gradient palette, so you need to specify different colors for each layer. Using the Gradient Editor You can use the Gradient Editor, which is similar to the Gradient Palette, to modify an

What's New In?

Fraudulent Selling of Securities A fraud is a technique used to cheat, trick, deceive, and make someone pay for a wrong. When a potential buyer for a business case is deceived by the person selling a "bad" business case, then the person who is being cheated is entitled to file a civil lawsuit against the person who sold them that fraudulently bad business case. In the banking industry, the term fraud is used to describe anything that you do not have permission to do; this is why you should never sign anything you are not 100% comfortable with. In the real estate industry, a fraudulent seller is one who sells real estate without permission and in doing so, he/she is violating certain regulations that define the process of buying or selling a property. In the contractual sales of property transactions, the seller and the buyer have to sign an agreement that will create a binding and legally binding commitment. In order for the sales process to be successful, and this is crucial to the buyer, the seller should have done every bit of due diligence that is needed, because trust is everything. I cannot stress this enough, because trust is the foundation of every successful business transaction and not just in the real estate industry. If you do not ask the right questions, then your prospect is only investing their time and money into the worst transaction they could have ever thought of. So what are the questions you should be asking the seller during the sales process? GENERAL QUESTIONNAIRE FOR A FRAUDULENT SELLER FOR BUSINESS CASES Q: Is there an existing buyer that is interested in this business case? A: If there is, who is it? Q: What is the current value of this business case? A: Quick, what are you paid a month? Q: Is the business case in compliance with their ongoing financial obligations? A: Is there a revenue producing income statement? Q: What is the proposed purchase price? A: What is this price calculated from? Q: What is this proposal fee, if any? A: What is the present value of this business case? Q: Has there been any evaluation of the financial statements presented to you? A: What is the status of the transaction? Q: How long does this transaction take to complete? A: What is the acceptable time frame? Q: Do you
